ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

The evolution of scientific research and epistemology has made it certain that no research stands in isolation. It must build off existing knowledge to establish its novelty. As such, one could say no researcher is an island on its own. To this end, I wish to acknowledge the efforts and contributions of people and institutions that made this dissertation a reality. First and foremost, I appreciate the management and staff of Lead City University who have provided the necessary institutional support and structures in place to ensure research of this nature are conducted.

With the advancement in technology, doctrinal research is becoming far less tenuous than it used to be. This is due to the good work done by key online repositories like research gate, academia, the internet archive and other sources too numerous to be named. I appreciate the efforts of the facilitators of these repositories for the struggle to keep science alive and the contributions of researchers who published on these free platforms for their sacrifice. I also appreciate and acknowledge the faculty of law of Lead City University and all the staff that have been involved in one way or the other with the conclusion and publication of this dissertation.

I also acknowledge the efforts of my academic supervisor, Prof. Olasupo Owoeye who contributed immensely to ensure that my graduate school experience was filled with a rewarding learning experience. This involved arduous reviews and discussions relating to the nature of my dissertation which I greatly appreciate. I also appreciate the efforts of Dr. Muyiwa Awosika who at some point in the course of my research offered useful advice that calibrated my thoughts on some aspects. I expect to take these key lessons I have learnt into my practical ordeals in law practice.

I very much appreciate my husband for his unflinching support and encouragement throughout the duration of my program in this institution. We still have a long way to go together. Finally, I acknowledge the efforts of my parents and siblings throughout. Thank you very much. To other family members, I appreciate your support during this research. Thank you.
